STATE of the CHARITY,

FOR THE

RELIEF

OF

THE WIDOWS AND ORPHANS

OF

MEDICAL MEN,

IN

ESSEX and HERTFORDSHIRE,

Instituted Oct. 30, 1786.

BOCKING:

PRINTED BY J. L. SHEARCROFT.

ADDRESS TO THE PUBLIC.

THE vicissitudes of human life are daily felt, and universally acknowledged. With the fairest prospects of health and success, man often falls a sacrifice to accident or disease, and leaves his family in circumstances of absolute or comparative distress.

Instances of this truth have occurred so frequently, that persons in particular situations have been induced to form themselves into Societies, for the purpose of raising funds that might obviate, or, at least, lessen the consequences of such events.

To this laudable motive the Society for the Relief of Widows and Orphans of the Clergy owes its establishment; and with the same benevolent intention, similar associations have been formed by men of other professions. The number of objects whose necessities have been relieved by these Societies, affords the most ample testimony of their utility, while the encouragement they have received from persons not immediately interested, is an unequivocal proof of their high estimation in the public opinion.

It is astonishing, that Medical Men should have been so long inattentive to the benefit which their families might derive in cases of distress, from a well regulated establishment of this kind. The opinion of the world, discountenancing celibacy in them, is one principal cause why there is proportionably a greater number married in this than in any other class of men. This circumstance, with the many obstacles that oppose a productive establishment in business, especially when the practitioners are young, often prevent them from making suitable provision for their families in case of death. And, if to these circumstances it be added, that they are from the nature of their profession, particularly exposed to contagion and other causes of disease, more arguments need not be urged to enforce the necessity of promoting some scheme to alleviate the distress of the families of Medical Men, when death deprives them of a Husband or Father. This Society is formed to raise and establish a Fund for that purpose.

Young professional men, reflecting upon the uncertainty both of life and success, will naturally find comfort in the consideration of its being in their power, at a small annual expence, to lessen the miseries to which their wives and children are liable to be exposed after their decease. Such as are enabled to bequeath wealth to those whom they may leave behind them, will have an opportunity of testifying their gratitude to that profession in which it has been acquired, by contributing some part of it to the relief of the families of their less fortunate brethren :---And others, not of the profession who are benevolently disposed, will by means of this establishment, have it in their power to exercise their humanity, by contributing to the relief of those who were entitled to indulge better expectations.

If this institution had been founded upon the principles of a society for the benefit of survivors, it could not have answered fully the proposed benevolent intention ; for then it must have had a termination ; whereas it is meant to be perpetual ;---Or, if it had been formed upon the general plan of Annuity Societies, the benefits might have fallen in many cases to widows and children not in want of assistance ; and in others, relief could not have been proportioned to the degree of real distress, which is the object of this Society.
